

SDSU English Department In Memoriam

Dr. Margaret Duggan

Dr. Mildred Flynn, SND

The SDSU English Department, the College of Arts & Sciences, and the university and Brookings communities lost two of their long-time faculty members in the past year. Drs. Margaret Duggan and Mildred “Micki” Flynn, both Professors Emerita of English, have left behind a legacy of excellence in teaching and scholarship at SDSU.

Dr. Duggan (Ph.D., Columbia, 1972) joined the SDSU English Department in 1978 and retired in 2001. She regularly taught courses in her area of expertise, Restoration and 18th-century British literature. She also regularly taught courses in world literature, European studies, humanities studies, and composition courses. She also served as the Coordinator of the Humanities program and was active in the European Studies program. She also served as an academic advisor to English majors. Dr. Duggan was a noted scholar of 17th- and 18th-century British literature, having published numerous articles and notes and given numerous conference presentations.

Dr. Flynn (Ph.D., Missouri, 1985) joined the SDSU English Department in 1990 and retired in 2009. She regularly taught courses in her area of expertise, Romantic and 19th-century British literature. She also taught courses in world literature, mythology, the Bible as literature, European studies, global studies, and technical communication. She also served as a faculty member in both the European Studies and Honors programs, and she served on the Honors Program committee. She also served as an academic advisor to English majors. Dr. Flynn was a noted scholar of the British poet Gerard Manley Hopkins, having published numerous articles and notes on his and other works of British literature and given numerous conference presentations.

Both Drs. Duggan and Flynn were exemplary faculty members at SDSU. We will miss them dearly, and we will always remember and appreciate their numerous, substantial contributions to SDSU.

*Dr. Jason McEntee
English Department Head
Acting Associate Dean,
College of Arts and Sciences*