

Hearing Discord

D.A. Hickman

Conformity is the dullest kind of reality, brittle waves crashing against the shoreline like water seeking land, again and again I hear its straining, pounding its poorly hidden sorrow until I crave a yielding silence to part the sky

dance with the wind perch on the tallest tree whistle in the night like an open door.