

South Dakota State University
Open PRAIRIE: Open Public Research Access Institutional Repository and Information Exchange

---

Extension Extra

SDSU Extension

---

6-1-2009

Thriving in Today's Times: Just for Kids—Watching the News

Ann Michelle Daniels
South Dakota State University

Follow this and additional works at: http://openprairie.sdstate.edu/extension\_extra

---

Recommended Citation

Daniels, Ann Michelle, "Thriving in Today's Times: Just for Kids—Watching the News" (2009). Extension Extra. Paper 454.
http://openprairie.sdstate.edu/extension\_extra/454

This Other is brought to you for free and open access by the SDSU Extension at Open PRAIRIE: Open Public Research Access Institutional Repository and Information Exchange. It has been accepted for inclusion in Extension Extra by an authorized administrator of Open PRAIRIE: Open Public Research Access Institutional Repository and Information Exchange. For more information, please contact michael.biondo@sdstate.edu.

Thriving in Today's Times: Just for Kids – Watching the News

*Ann Michelle Daniels, Extension family life, parenting, and child care specialist
Department of Human Development, College of Family and Consumer Sciences, SDSU*

Ok . . . you are finally finished with your chores and you are ready to watch television.

You're thinking maybe a little action-adventure or comedy might be nice. But no. Instead, there is a special news report interrupting your show. You get a sinking feeling in your stomach. Something is wrong.

The news can upset all of us, young and old. It can scare us, make us mad, and even make us worry about our homes, families, and lives.

Here are some important tips to follow when watching the news:

Remind yourself that it is OK to be mad, sad, or even scared. It's how you react to those feelings that is important. If the news upsets you, find someone to talk to about it. Try to watch the news with your parents. Change the channel. Go do something else. Go play ball, draw a picture, or read a book.

Understand that the news reports the unusual and the exceptional. From the news, it may seem that forest fires, school shootings, and tornadoes happen all the time, but in truth, most forests don't catch on fire, most schools don't have shootings, and though there are tornadoes, tornadoes that cause lots and lots of damage are rare (they are unusual and exceptional).

Remember that some news about crime and violence can be reported over and over again, which can make some things seem more sensational than they really are or should be.

There are many ways for news to be reported. You can see news reports about the same subject on television or the Internet, in magazines and newspapers, and hear it on the radio. The actual crime may have happened only once, but it may be reported on several times and in several different ways.

Don't use the news for all your information. If you want to know more about something, ask your parents or teachers. Don't just rely on the news. For example, if you have heard something that concerns you, don't just worry about it—take time to learn more information.

Remember that information and events from all around the world are reported in the news. You may hear something about diseases. Diseases are scary, but the chances of you getting most of the ones you hear about are very, very, very small. If you hear news about the poor economy, business closings, or job losses, ask an adult about how that news may affect you. If you are scared, worried, or even curious, talk to your parents. Ask questions. Tell them your views. Find out what your family can do to keep safe. For example, the economy is in the news a lot lately. You might hear of people worried about their jobs, worried about money, or even afraid of losing their homes. Ask your parents what your family is doing about the economy. Ask if you can help. You might be surprised how much help you can be to your family during a time of crisis.

Take action! If you see something on the news that bothers you, such as people losing their homes, then take action. Learn how you and your friends can help families in need. See if there is anything you can do to help the people who have lost their land or homes. This may include gathering up toys from your neighborhood or getting your 4-H club to give health kits to the families.

Remember: Talking about things that make you sad with people you care about can make things seem so much better.

REFERENCES

Levin, D. Remote Control Childhood? Combating the Hazards of Media Culture. Washington D.C.: National Association for the Education of Young Children, 1998.

Original ExEx14071 publication title (June 2002):
Farming, Ranching, and Stress: It's a Family Issue: #14: Just for Kids—Watching the News

South Dakota
Cooperative Extension Service

South Dakota State University, South Dakota counties, and U.S. Department of Agriculture cooperating. South Dakota State University is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer and offers all benefits, services, education, and employment opportunities without regard for race, color, creed, religion, national origin, ancestry, citizenship, age, gender, sexual orientation, disability, or Vietnam Era veteran status.

EXEX14071 Access at <http://agbiopubs.sdstate.edu/articles/ExEx14071.pdf> or at <http://sdces.sdstate.edu/thriving/>